Dems Provide Only Slogans

President Johnson's "attack on poverty" is just one more of the phoney Democratic slogans that have gotten this country nowhere and helped to make the American people the most gullible on earth . . .

In World War I, Woodrow Wilson gave up "to make the world safe from democracy" and "the war to end wars," while increasing the national debt 27 billions. . .

Later came Franklin D. Roosevelt with another war. His "everlasting peace" resulted in no peace at all and a debt of 265 billions . . .

Next came Harry S. Truman. He cut down the prior fantastic claim to "peace in our time" and as usual, not only involved the U. S. in another war but gave Soviet Russia and Red China encouragement by permitting their seizure of small nations while he appeased the enemy . . . The debt now rose to 280 billions.

After Gen. Eisenhower came Mr. Kennedy. His "Alliance for Progress" would have made hundreds, perhaps thousands of millionaires among the already rich south of the border with next to nothing to show for the poor . . . The debt skyrocketed some more and the purchasing power of the dollar slid downwards.

President Johnson is now gambling on a 5-million deficit to add to the recent 20 billion but no one can say what it will be. In the meantime, K. & Co. rub their hands in glee every time the debt is increased 10 billions because a financial morass anywhere is one of the mainstays to help communism, as can be seen time and again in Europe and South America. . .

What this country needs is a thorough cleaning out in Washington, especially of the State Department the C.I.A., the pinks, fake liberals, Communist-minded, squanderers and those who are ready to sell our American rights and interests at every turn.

What we need is a new administration with backbone, common sense and a sane fiscal policy. Instead of hollow slogans let us have specific proposals including reduction of the national debt.

Too Much Unsaid

Editor, The News:

No doubt millions of Americans heard the taped interview of President Johnson by the three TV networks on March 15. If the questioning was not all pre-arranged, here was an excellent opportunity for the President to address the public on many of the subjects which are of the utmost importance to our future, and which are a great source of concern to most of us; subjects such as the threat of Cuba to us and this hemisphere and what we intend to do about it. Also, the active reports of past and present infiltration of Communist sympathizers in many branches of the executive department, particularly the State and Defense Departments as well as the CIA. He might have explained our failure to take a more aggressive attitude toward our avowed enemies. Also, our constant efforts to appease and apologize, as in the case of the two unarmed American planes shot down over East Germany after being lured there by the Russians, according to military opinions, as compared with our policy to give safe conduct and guidance to German planes which frequently fly over our areas in West Germany!

Oh yes, the President used a lot of words in the hour's time, but what, specifically did he say? What's even more to the point, what has he ever said that was not geared to increasing his political stature? Of course, he did turn off some of the lights in the White House and he is against poverty and, I presume he is for motherhood, especially for Democrats. Reading his program for the elimination of poverty brings sharp memories of the New Deal days when legislation was supposed to be the answer to all our troubles.
